Community Re-Entry from Criminal Justice System:

- Transitional Housing
  - Beacon of Hope (Women's)
  - House of Redemption (Men's)
  - Village of Redemption (Men's)
- Case Management
  - State IDs, Birth Certificates, & Essential Documents
  - Connection to Behavioral Health Treatment (substance abuse, mental health)
  - Recovery Resources
- Employment Support (IHS' Hele2Work Program)
  - Soft-skills training
  - Resume building
  - Job placement
  - Vocational training: New Leaf – Building Maintenance, Landscaping, Janitorial; Taking Root – Urban Agriculture
- Life Skills Coaching
  - Financial Literacy
  - Referrals to programs based on client's personal goals
  - Healthy lifestyle, including creating a support network

Why Re-Entry Homes?

Community re-entry homes allow people exiting the criminal justice system to make a “soft landing” back into society. While living in our re-entry homes, residents can secure vital documents, apply for jobs, open bank accounts, and join a network of like-minded people looking to make a new start.

After being incarcerated, many do not have family or friends they can turn to. On average, 50% become homeless upon release. Without money or a place to live, former offenders can quickly fall back into old habits that result in re-offense. According to a 2018 State of Hawaii report by the Interagency Council on Intermediate Sanctions, nearly 49% of those formerly incarcerated in Hawaii become repeat offenders.

The IHS Re-Entry program helps break these cycles by offering opportunities for second chances.